

Multi-column layout

When `setColumns(N, gutter)` is active, body content fills the current column from top to bottom, then advances to the next column. A page break only happens after the last column on a page overflows.

Two-column body

Paragraph 1 — The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog while a thoughtful narrator describes the scene in tremendous detail. Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet, consectetur adipiscing elit. Praesent vitae quam vel sapien ornare suscipit. Curabitur eu nulla sit amet ipsum facilisis dapibus.

Paragraph 2 — The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog while a thoughtful narrator describes the scene in tremendous detail. Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet, consectetur adipiscing elit. Praesent vitae quam vel sapien ornare suscipit. Curabitur eu nulla sit amet ipsum facilisis dapibus.

Single-column footer

Calling `setColumns(1)` restores the full-width body for any further content. Headers, footers and watermarks always render on the full page, regardless of the body's column configuration.
